Eid Al-Fitr Experience

by: Razi Hamizan bin Muhammad Geoffrey

Our Eid encounter began with Balik Kampung. We always talk about traffic bottlenecks at some point during the year. Avoiding traffic jams, considering the needs of those who are snarled in them, speculating about when they will end, formulating solutions to them, or (if we're lucky), making remarks on the absence of traffic jams. We were fortunate though, because our hometown is not far away. Upon arrival, we started to spring-clean my grandma's house and spruce them up with a new decors. We had a chance to flock to the popular bazaar at Batu Pahat to source for new carpets, cushions, curtains, etc.

Of course, Eid is not complete without new clothes! Traditional garb such as the songkok and sampung (men), and the baju kurung (women) are available in all colours and designs. Most families opted for similar colour themes to signify familial bonds and ties. So did my family. With the increasing convenience and accessibility of online shopping, we chose to get our Hari Raya outfits online. Our theme this year is purple. Other than that, feasting is a "must-do" during this festive period, and much effort and time were put into preparing and cooking mouth-watering dishes, such as lontong, ketupat, rendang, curry ayam, sambal goreng, etc.

On the first day of Eid Al-Fitr, we visited the immediate and extended family. Everyone congregated at a senior family member's home for a time of fellowship and feasting. A practice where family members seek forgiveness from each other is also observed, to start relationships on a clean slate. This year, my Eid was celebrated just enjoyed it very much!

Eid Al-Fitr Experience

by: Muhammad Hazim Fahmi bin Ariffin

A day before Eid, my family and I went to our aunt's hometown in Melaka to celebrate Eid with their families. On the Eid day itself began with an early morning prayer in the mosque, to thank Allah for His blessings. After that, we sought forgiveness from family members for all trespasses, insisting that peace and harmony for everyone. Not to forget, we dressed up for the occasion, too. We wore traditional Malay clothing. My family was in black whereas my aunt's family was in purple.

Eid celebration is incomplete without all the excellent cuisine traditionally served in the house. As for my family, we prepared traditional delicacies such as ketupat (rice dumpling cooked in a palm leaf pouch), rendang (meat stewed in spices), dodol (sticky, fluffy, toffee-like sweet) that is famous in Melaka, and satay (skewered meat). On the second day of Eid, we took the opportunity to travel around Melaka, spending quality time with my cousins. We visited famous attractions in Melaka and guess what? There were less people unlike the normal days. I got to enjoy the places well! This year I had a great celebration after past few years with pandemic, this year is all about having a great moment with family members!
